The real image is produced by the actual intersection of the rays of light. Hence they can be captured on the screen. Conversely, there is an imaginary intersection of the rays of light in the case of virtual image, so it cannot be cast on the screen. In general, real images are inverted, whereas virtual images are erect. The converging lens is ...

Two, optics and photometrics, are technical physical factors that limit an image's resemblance to a natural scene. The other two, sensory and cognitive, are factors that affect viewer perception. The main point of the discussion is that pictures do not and cannot represent a reality which is independent of the viewer who sees them.
