Gaiman was born in Portchester, England, the oldest of three children. When he was five, the family moved to Sussex, where they lived in the house that eventually inspired the setting of The Ocean at the End of the Lane. His parents moved to study Scientology, a religious affiliation that caused some issues for Gaiman—one headmaster forced seven-year-old Gaiman to withdraw from school due to his father's role as a public relations official for the local Scientologist center.
